The explanation offered in the publication was that the damaged area of the brain was the temporal lobe. This prior case shows us is that so as to spell out any situation, we must look at it in the different angles presented. This is done by looking at each portion of the mind and seeing exactly what that component does and how it might be related to everything else. In the instance of the letter L in the structure of the brain, we view the term light from the left side. Someone is usually able to identify a light by the person who explained it or seeing it on a certain source. When we were to ask someone for their friends and relatives, they would likely use their eyes for this purpose. In the case of this letter A, we see the term anger at the ideal side of this diagram. If someone says or sees an angry individual, it is usually easier for somebody to identify the person as having anger compared to recall where they watched them or what they said. It isn't that easy to remember that a light was seen or the individual was mad. In the case of the letter B, we view the phrase bored in the center of the diagram. Boredom is made by the temporal lobes. Everyone understands when somebody has had enough of something. Many find themselves bored or annoyed easily. In the letter D, we see the phrase dislike on the right side of the diagram. Dislike comes from the temporal lobes. One does not dislike someone without being conscious of it.

A similar thing happens with dislike. Sometimes anger is utilized to express hostility or jealousy. In summary, the letter L in the diagram of the mind is pointing to the temporal lobe. The letter A in the structure of the brain is pointing into the frontal lobe. The letter B from the diagram of the mind is pointing into the parietal lobe. Please try again in a bit.
